

The Last Supper

The Last Supper, an important meal shared by Jesus and his disciples during the Feast of Unleavened Bread (or Passover), is a significant event for Christians to remember during Holy Week.

At a very dangerous time for Jesus, the thirteen men sat around the table to share the Last Supper. Jesus' claim to be the Son of God meant that many people wanted to see Jesus come to harm. This caused Jesus and his disciples to feel anxious during their final gathering together – the room was silent.

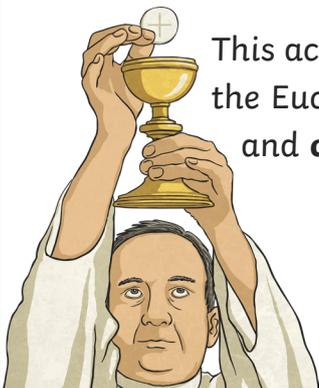

When Jesus finally spoke and said, "Truly I tell you, one of you will betray me," all of his disciples were aghast, wondering which of them it would be – each believing that it could not possibly be them.

Jesus continued by explaining that he would die but the man who betrayed him would regret his actions for the rest of his life. Then Judas, the one who would betray him, said, "Surely you don't mean me, Rabbi?" to which Jesus replied, in a hushed voice, "You have said so." Judas felt ashamed and tense but pleased that the other disciples had not heard the conversation. He did not wish to think of the consequences.

At this point, Jesus thanked God for the bread and broke it to share, explaining that it was his body which was given for them to remember him. Following this, he took a chalice of red wine and said, "This is my blood, which will be poured out for many people so their sins may be forgiven." Everyone took a sip as the cup was passed around.

This act is commemorated in the Christian church today in the form of the Eucharist, a sacrament in which bread and wine are consecrated and consumed.

The disciples were astounded by this lowly act, because to them, Jesus was the King of Kings not a servant as his actions were suggesting. Due to this, Peter refused to let Jesus wash his feet. “If you don’t allow me to wash your feet, you can no longer be with me,” Jesus explained. Peter replied that, if that was the case, then Jesus could wash his hands and head as well as his feet. Jesus replied that he only needed to wash his feet for his whole body to become clean so Peter complied and agreed to let Jesus wash his feet. Jesus completed his task of washing the disciples’ feet before changing back into his normal clothes and returning to the table, where the disciples waited, eager to understand the unusual deed they had just witnessed.

As they prayed together, Jesus asked them, “Do you understand what I have done for you? You call me ‘Teacher’ and ‘Lord’, and that is who I am. Now that I have washed your feet, you can wash one another’s feet.”

Through the significance of his actions, Jesus tried to share a message with his disciples about the importance of acting compassionately towards one another, just as he had done. He wanted to show that everyone should be treated as equals and that no one is better than anyone else.

The Last Supper

Jesus entered Jerusalem on a donkey during the Feast of Unleavened Bread, or Passover (a Jewish celebration of the freedom of the Israelites). He was welcomed by large crowds, although there were also many people who wanted to see him dead because he claimed to be the Son of God and challenged religious authority.

Jesus sent two disciples, Peter and John, ahead with instructions on how to prepare the special meal. Following his entry into the city, Jesus and the ten remaining disciples went to the room where they all sat around the large table to share the Last Supper.

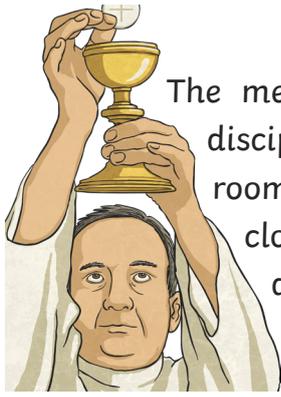

It was a very dangerous time for Jesus because of the bad feeling towards him so the disciples felt anxious; this caused them to remain quiet during the meal until Jesus broke the silence and said, “Truly I tell you, one of you will betray me.” All of his disciples were aghast, wondering which of them it would be – each believing that it could not possibly be them.

Jesus continued to say, “The one who dips his bread into the bowl with me will betray me. I will die, just as is written, but the man who betrays me will feel sorry forever.” Then Judas, the one who would betray him, said, “Surely you don’t mean me, Rabbi?” to which Jesus replied, in a hushed voice, “You have said so.” Judas, feeling discomfited and nervous, was pleased that the other disciples had not heard the conversation. He did not wish to think of the consequences.

At this point, Jesus thanked God for the bread and broke it to share, explaining, “This is my body which is for you: this do in remembrance of me.” Following this, he took a chalice (a large cup or goblet) of red wine and announced, “This is my blood: this do in remembrance of me.” Everyone took a sip as the cup was passed around.

This act is commemorated in the Christian church today in the form of the Eucharist, a sacrament (regarded in the Christian church as imparting spiritual grace) in which bread and wine are consecrated (made sacred) and consumed.

The meal continued with Jesus talking and celebrating with his disciples. After some time, Jesus moved to a different area of the room where he exchanged his clothing for uncomplicated servant clothes – a simple towel wrapped around his body – before filling a bowl with water. In an act of servitude to them, he used this to wash his disciple's feet before drying them with the towel he was wearing.

The disciples were astounded by this lowly act, because to them, Jesus was the King of Kings not a servant as his actions were suggesting. Due to this, Peter refused to let Jesus wash his feet. "If you don't allow me to wash your feet, you can no longer be with me," Jesus explained. Peter replied that, if that was the case, then Jesus could wash his hands and head as well as his feet. Jesus responded that he only needed to wash his feet for his whole body to become clean so Peter conceded and agreed to let Jesus wash his feet. As Jesus completed his task of washing the disciples' feet, he asked them, "to love one another as I have loved you," before changing back into his normal clothes. He returned to the table where the disciples waited, eager to understand the unusual deed they had just witnessed.

As they prayed together, Jesus prepared the disciples for his departure, telling them that they were his, "friends and not servants." Jesus then asked them, "Do you understand what I have done for you? You call me 'Teacher' and 'Lord' and that is who I am. Now that I have washed your feet, you can wash one another's feet."

Through the significance of his actions, Jesus tried to share an important lesson with his disciples about the importance of acting compassionately towards one another and that everyone should be treated equally.

The Last Supper

During the Feast of Unleavened Bread, or Passover (a Jewish celebration of the freedom of the Israelites), Jesus entered Jerusalem on a donkey. He was welcomed by large crowds, who laid their cloaks down for him and sang, but there were also many people who wanted him to perish because they were angry at his claim to be the Son of God and his challenge to religious authority.

Jesus sent two disciples ahead, instructing them to find a man carrying a jar of water, who would lead them to a house where they would find a large upper room, furnished and ready. The two disciples did as they had been asked. They were later joined by Jesus and the ten remaining disciples, who sat around the large table to share the Last Supper.

It was a very dangerous time for Jesus because of the bad feeling towards him so the disciples felt anxious; this caused them to remain quiet during the meal until Jesus broke the silence to predict his betrayal. All of the disciples were aghast, wondering who the traitor would be - each believing that it could not possibly be them. Jesus continued to explain that he would die but his betrayer would feel sorry forever.

Then Judas, the one who would betray him, said "Surely you don't mean me, Rabbi?"

Jesus answered, "You have said so." Judas, feeling discomfited and nervous, was pleased that the other disciples had not heard the conversation because they were distracted.

Jesus took some of the unleavened bread (flat bread with no yeast) and broke it to share, explaining, "This is my body which is for you: this do in remembrance of me." Following this, he took a cup of red wine and announced, "This is my blood: this do in remembrance of me." Everyone took a sip as the cup was passed around.

This act is commemorated in the Christian church today in the form of the Eucharist, a sacrament (a ceremony regarded as imparting spiritual grace in the Christian church) in which bread and wine are consecrated (made sacred) and consumed (eaten, drunk or ingested).

The meal continued until Jesus moved to a different area of the room, where he exchanged his clothing for uncomplicated servant clothes – a simple towel wrapped around his body - before filling a bowl with water. In an act of servitude to them, he used this to wash his disciple's feet before drying them with the towel he was wearing.

The disciples could not believe that they were witnessing Jesus perform this lowly act; to them, Jesus was the King of Kings not a servant as his actions were suggesting. Peter refused to let Jesus wash his feet.

“If you don't allow me to wash your feet, you can no longer be with me,” Jesus explained so Peter replied that, if that was the case, then Jesus could wash his hands and head as well as his feet. To this, Jesus responded that he only needed to wash his feet for his whole body to become clean. Peter then conceded and allowed Jesus to wash his feet. As Jesus finished his task of washing the disciples' feet, he explained that he came, “not to be served but to serve and to give his life as a ransom for many.” Following this act, Jesus changed back into his normal clothes and returned to the table of men eagerly waiting to try to understand the unusual deed they had just witnessed.

Together they prayed and Jesus prepared the disciples for his departure, telling them they were his “friends and not servants.” He then asked them, “Do you understand what I have done for you? You call me ‘Teacher’ and ‘Lord’, and that is who I am. And now that I have washed your feet, you can wash one another's feet.”

Through the significance of his actions, Jesus tried to share an essential lesson with his disciples about the importance of acting compassionately towards one another and that everyone should be treated equally.
